

SPRING B: LETTER FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

My Dear Honorable Colleagues and Friends:

Our enthusiasm for the work on sustainable development and sustainability is reinvigorated by all the economic, social, cultural, political, educational, and ecological/environmental problems that have been growing with the complexities brought about as a result of the growing exponential population explosion and the demand for natural resources. On top of that, there are conflicts around the world which exacerbate the problems of sustainable development in Africa.

The authors of the articles in this issue have chosen to address the problems of sustainable development from a disciplinary perspective. They offer unique solutions to the questions raised in their papers. Their works add to the already existing body of works published in the JSDA. The articles in this issue are thought provoking and interdisciplinary in perspective.

Please do not hesitate to provide us with your constructive criticisms.

We thank our readership for the support we get on a regular basis.

Sincerely,

Valentine Udoh James, Ph.D.; CEI; CAQS
Professor of Environmental Management, Planning and Policy
Certified Environmental Inspector
Certified Air Quality Specialist
Clarion University of Pennsylvania

