

LETTER FROM THE EDITOR-IN-CHIEF

My Dear Friends and Colleagues:

It is again my distinct pleasure and honor to bring you this fall issue of the Journal of Sustainable Development in Africa (JSDA). This issue continues in the vein of past issues by expanding and deepening the discussions on the concepts of sustainable development and sustainability. The authors have explored the concepts from their disciplinary backgrounds and many have employed the case study approved in order to emphasize the need to operationalize the concepts.

The papers in this issue have incorporated sustainability and sustainable development concerns into their discussions and analyses. The findings of all the articles will assist African communities in strengthening their development and environmental policies and building the capacities of current and future institutions to manage the resources of their communities effectively and efficiently. Some of the papers provide the roadmap for assessing and investigating the environmental, social, and economic problems caused by development.

Overall, it is our sincere hope that the articles have provided the framework for continuous dialogue about development concerns in Africa.

Thank you for your support.

Sincerely,

Valentine Udoh James, Ph.D.; CEI; CAQS
Professor of Environmental Management, Planning and Policy
Certified Environmental Inspector
Certified Air Quality Specialist
Clarion University of Pennsylvania

